

Journal of the Royal Society Interface is the newest addition to the Royal Society journal list and publishes articles at the interface between the physical sciences (including mathematics) and the life sciences. It draws its authors from all over the world and has a similarly international readership. It has made a big impact on the research community and citations increased by 500% from 2005 to 2006.

It provides a high-quality forum to publish rapidly and interact across this boundary in two main ways: J. R. Soc. Interface publishes research applying chemistry, engineering, materials science, mathematics and physics to the biological and medical sciences; it also highlights discoveries in the life sciences of relevance to the physical sciences. Both sides of the interface are considered equally and it is one of the only journals to cover this exciting new territory. J. R. Soc. Interface welcomes contributions on a diverse range of topics, including but not limited to; biocomplexity, bioengineering, bioinformatics, biomaterials, biomechanics, bionanoscience, biophysics, chemical biology, computer science (as applied to the life sciences), medical physics, synthetic biology, systems biology, theoretical biology and tissue engineering.

J. R. Soc. Interface is published bimonthly and has enjoyed such a rapidly increasing rate of submissions since its launch in 2005 that we shall increase its frequency to monthly next year. Accepted articles are published online ahead of print and total publication times are typically under 60 days.
